RIGHTS OF WAY: MOBILITY AND THE CITY

December 5, 2013– May 26, 2014

[Editor's note: High-resolution images and interviews with the curator are available upon request.]

Rights of Way: Mobility and the City will be a global exploration of mobility and transportation in cities. The exhibition will feature dozens of examples of visionary urban thinking, showing how the city is shaped by the ways people move through it. Curated by James Graham and Meredith Miller of MILLIGRAM-office, Rights of Way will demonstrate that our urban environment is the result of constant negotiation among designers, policy makers, the private sector, and individual residents. By claiming that access to mobility is access to opportunity and that everyone has his or her own “right of way,” this futuristic show will reveal how those public rights are always at play in the shared commons of the city. The exhibition will examine large-scale urban futures, contemporary examples of innovative design for transit and public space, historical attempts at remaking the city, and individual adaptations of mobility systems.

Rights of Way will also include three projects from the 2012 Audi Urban Future Award, focusing on three megaregions: the Pearl River Delta in China’s Guangdong Province; São Paulo; and the Boston–Washington, DC (BosWash) Corridor. Renderings, drawings, photography, videos, infographics, and a media library that will allow visitors to delve further into the issues raised by the exhibition content will be on display. In addition, the first floor of BSA Space will display a rotating gallery of “digital residencies,” in which designers, artists, and thinkers from around the world will stake their own claims about mobility in the city.
